

FASHIONABLE PET DOGS ARE SEEN IN PARIS ESTABLISHMENTS

BY HERALD CORRESPONDENT, IN SEARCH FOR HINTS FOR BUYERS

[From the European Edition of the Herald]

DOGS as to gifts are becoming more and more fashionable. The number of people who do not regard their establishment as complete without one or more canine pets is continually increasing, and the presentation of dogs as gifts is a custom which has evolved from this present day love of pets.

Dogs may be divided into two classes, the useful and the ornamental. The former class includes watchdogs, police dogs, shooting dogs, hounds and sheep dogs, and in regard to these the would be owner generally likes to choose for himself. But in the case of purely pet dogs it is different. Here the recipient has no fixed purpose in keeping a dog, and so long as the little animal is healthy, lively and affectionate the question of which one among the fashionable varieties is less important.

To those who intend to make a present of this description the following hints will be useful. They have been obtained by a HERALD correspondent, who has visited the chief establishments of Parisian dog breeders, where animals in perfect health and having passed their distemper can be found.

Chenil de la Madeleine.

The Chenil de la Madeleine, No. 25 Rue Duphot, near the famous church, under the direction of Messrs. Troysien and Christo, is one of the leading dog shops in Paris, and many high class animals can be found there for sale. These are brought to Paris every morning from the two kennels of the establishment. The one for large dogs is situated at Montrouge, while the other, devoted to pet dogs, is at Neuilly.

The two directors of the Chenil de la Madeleine are well known at all the dog shows. They have exhibited in France, England, Belgium, and they have reaped quite a harvest of medals won by their dogs. Their premises in the Rue Duphot are quite up to date. There is a bath with running hot water where dogs brought by customers from outside are thoroughly washed. It is a specialty of this house to look after the dogs that have been sold by it so as to maintain them in perfect health. The Scotch terrier of Mme. Louise Abbéma, the Italian loup, the cockers and the Airedale terriers of Mme. Sarah Bernhardt, as well as many other dogs of different customers, are sent weekly to the Chenil de la Madeleine, where a staff of trained attendants give them the attention they require.

In Mons. Christo's opinion, French bulldogs are quite fashionable just now, but, like his confrères, he says the German shepherd is the craze of the moment. "As a watchdog," he said, "it has overthrown the French dog, which, however, to my mind is superior. But the German shepherd is more ferocious toward persons that it does not know, and this may account to some extent for the preference that is given to it."

Talking of dogs in general, Mons. Christo complained bitterly of last summer's tremendous heat. "It was disastrous to dog breeders," he added. "An epidemic of enteritis has been raging in England, in Germany and in Belgium, and a large number of fine specimens have been lost. So the prices are generally higher this year."

One of the best dogs in the establishment is undoubtedly Dick, a highly bred French bulldog, perfect in all respects. Dick is white, with a few black spots, and its features are the classical ones of the race—short back, low on its legs, good broken tail, fine ears and a well shaped skull. "It is one of the best bulldogs now living," says Mons. Christo. A tiny Brussels griffon, Bijou, which weighs only 750 grammes, is one of the curiosities of the shop. It is claimed that it is the smallest dog ever seen. Bijou can be carried in the pocket without making it bulge out and it can stand on the open hand. There is also Tow-Tehing, a red Pekinese with a very short face, very low on its legs and good all over. Mikado is a small Japanese, white and black, weighing three pounds. Also a pair of white toy English terriers deserve mention. They are Teddy and Queenie, two and a half and three pounds in weight.

Besides these, there is also a big choice of Pomeranians, cockers, Blenheim, Pekinese, fox, Irish, Scotch and Skye terriers. Yorkshire terriers, in the opinion of Mons. Christo, are the most suitable dogs to take to America. They are very affectionate and have robust health. There seems to be no demand for big dogs save for the German shepherds, of which a unique collection can be seen at rue Duphot. They are all perfectly trained either as watchdogs or as police dogs.

Among recent sales made at the Chenil de la Madeleine are a small bulldog to Mons. Ignatieff, a Blenheim to Mme. Cheremetoff, a Pomeranian to Mme. Vagiano, a German shepherd to Mons. Vagiano, a French bulldog to Mlle. Pernikowska, a Skye terrier to Mons. Max Dearly, a griffon to Mrs. Maxwell and an English terrier to the Princess of Wrede.

Etablissements Gallina.

Affording complete security to the purchaser, there are the Etablissements Gallina, whose kennels are at Rueil, Nos. 316 to 324 avenue de Paris. They have two shops in Paris, one at No. 3 rue de Castiglione, the other at No. 5 rue de Presbourg. Mme. Lepelletier, the manager of the firm, likes to keep all her dogs at Rueil, where they can live in the open air, surrounded by every requirement for their comfort and health. All dogs can, of course, be seen in Paris, but it is one of the rules of the Etablissements Gallina never to show them in the windows of the two Paris shops. They thus escape the danger of agglomeration and lack of air.

Following the methods advocated in England at the canine institutes, all the dogs are cared for by two specially trained nurses wearing the pretty costume that is so well known. Indeed, this question of uniform plays quite an important part when dogs are brought to the kennels at Rueil after their arrival from England. They at once find themselves at home, and their usual shyness when they change masters is avoided. The kennels are situated in a large park not far from La Malmaison. The conditions there are incomparable as regards comfort, hygiene and cleanliness. Each "box" is airy and wide, so that the animals do not feel any sense of sequestration, and a dog purchased at Gallina's is always delivered to the customer in perfect health.

Special care is also taken of sick dogs by nurses who have studied all canine illnesses. The Rueil Kennels are open every day, Sunday included, and an important stock of healthy, bright and lively dogs of all species can be seen—top Pomeranians, Pekinese, Japanese, Yorkshire and toy terriers, Brussels griffons, King Charles, Blenheim, as well as French and English bulldogs, greyhounds, borzoi, Great Danes, Saint Bernards, collies, fox terriers, sheep dogs and police dogs of all the well known breeds.

Among these dogs there is an extraordinary pair of brown Pomeranians, eighteen months old, each weighing only three pounds. Another most interesting pair are the Japanese, Tokio and Chrysanthème, which have just been bought by Mme. de Lubarsky. This lady, who is the wife of a Russian State Councillor, is very fond of breeding dogs and has for several years been a regular customer of the firm. This year she won the first prize in the toy Pomeranian class at the Paris Dog Show with her dog Billy, that had been sold to her at Gallina's.

Among the numerous other customers who have purchased dogs from the establishment are the Queen of Roumania, the Grand Duke Boris, the Grand Duke Nicholas, Prince of Oldenburg, Towfik Pacha, Halim Pacha, Hussein Kamil Pacha, Prince Louis of Belgium, Mr. Vanderbilt, Marquis de Dion, Mons. de Montequieu, Baron de Forest, Mons. Edmond Rostand, Mme. Sarah Bernhardt, Mme. Lina Cavalieri, Mme. Collette Willy and Mme. Gherard.

In the two Parisian shops of the Etablissements Gallina can be found all those accessories and articles of luxury now made for dogs, such as collars and smart coats in perfect taste, baskets of all sorts, handkerchiefs, shoes for rough ground and the toilet articles that a dog must have nowadays to be in the fashion.

The Dog's Palace.

The Dog's Palace, No. 9 rue de Castiglione, is one of the best known establishments in Paris. Its proprietor, Mons. Aaron, is quite an expert on dogs, having devoted a good many years to the study of breeding. He is constantly traveling in foreign countries to search for the best obtainable dogs for his numerous customers. He believes that comfort is a most important factor in the breeding of dogs, and the establishment of the rue de Castiglione, where a large number of specimens are brought daily from the kennels at Levallois, is the very last word in sanitary and hygienic fittings. In spite of the quantity of dogs who pass a part of the day there the place is scrupulously clean, and disinfectants are freely used. At the back of the shop is a marble lavatory, where dogs are given baths. The air is always fresh and pure, and the dogs are kept spotlessly clean.

Talking about the present fashion in dogs, Mons. Aaron said that the toy Pomeranians, Pekinese, Brabantons, Brussels griffons and German pinschers were in great demand. "But that is nothing as compared with the German shepherds," he added. They are all the rage of the moment. Go to the Bois de Boulogne and you will see the number of these dogs that are daily taken out for a stroll by their masters. They are real police dogs, well trained for that special work, and there would be a hot time for any thief that would try to snatch their mistress's bag. To these qualities as a defender they add a great fondness for those who take care of them and are very affectionate. It is also one of their attractive qualities to look like wolves.

"French bulldogs are still in vogue, but the prices have altered much. This is due to the fact that the Americans have now bought the best specimens from French breeders and are breeding them themselves in the United States. A few days before Christmas I intend to show in my shop window a unique collection of Brabantons that do not weigh three pounds for four specimens."

Mons. Aaron has now in his establishment a brown Pomeranian, Fritz, sixteen months old, weighing three pounds, that already has won two first prizes in Stuttgart and Karlsruhe. He is a very rare specimen, in perfect condition. Papi is another wonderful little "Pom," thirteen months old and weighing three pounds, that may well be compared with Fritz. This dog promises to be a certain prize winner at canine exhibitions of the future. An extraordinary pair of Pekinese are Toki and Miete. They are the most perfect specimens ever seen. Together they weigh less than eight pounds.

Many Brussels griffons also are shown by Mons. Aaron, all being so good that it is quite impossible to say which is the best. They are very small, weighing about one and a half pounds each. A red Papillon, Mimis, two years old and weighing two and a half pounds, is worthy of special mention. It has a wonderfully intelligent little face and extraordinarily large ears. Twenty German pinschers, each more beautiful than the other, are recommended by Mons. Aaron, who prefers them to the toy terriers, as they have much stronger lungs and are better furnished with short hair.

Mons. Aaron has also at his kennels at Levallois more than eighty well trained defence and police dogs. One of the finest specimens, Leo, was given a short time ago by Mons. Aaron to his friend Mons. Jouin, sub-chief of the Detective Service.

The Royal Kennel.

Among the many customers of the Dogs' Palace are the German Emperor, the King of Württemberg, the Queen of Spain, the Queen of Italy, the Duchess of Hesse, Prince Eitel Friedrich, Princess Fürstberg, Princess Wrede, Fount Pacha, Sheriff Pacha, the Maharajah of Kapurthala, Mrs. Taft, Mr. August Belmont and Mr. J. Pierpont Morgan. The Duc de Chartres also was a regular customer of Mons. Aaron.

The Royal Kennel, No. 8 place de Budapest, near the Saint-Lazare Station, is a firm which breeds all kinds of live stock.

Dr. Ward Says Consumption Can Be Cured

Scientific opinion has stamped consumption as a curable disease. Dr. J. A. Ward, of Troy, Mo., a well known practicing physician and a fluent writer for medical magazines, is positive that consumption may be cured if treated rationally and in time. His opinion is based upon results achieved by the use of the Lloyd treatment for the prevention or cure of consumption. His letters follow:

"It is my opinion, formed from my experience with the treatment, that it will cure so large a percentage of cases as to revolutionize the treatment of tuberculosis within the next five years, and that consumption will become as amenable to treatment as any other curable disease. I have been in practice over 50 years and believe I know whereof I write when I state that the Lloyd treatment is the greatest remedy that has ever been discovered for the prevention or cure of consumption. I believe that Lloyd has succeeded in compounding a remedy that will as certainly cure consumption, if taken in its primary stage, as it is certain that a locomotive will move a train of cars. Respectfully,
DR. J. A. WARD,
Troy, Mo."

This is strong testimony, but is given by a man who has used the Lloyd treatment in his practice and has been convinced. This treatment is daily convincing patients and physicians. I have sworn proof of what it is doing for lung sufferers who had been coughing, sweating, spitting their lives away. Do you want to hear more of this Lloyd treatment which is offering HOPE FOR LUNG SUFFERERS? Then lose no more time, but write me TODAY. I'll send you proof that should startle you. JUDG C. Mons. and Mme. Koerige, the proprietors, have not confined themselves to the breeding of dogs. They have also many beautiful cats and several small monkeys. The kennels are at Asnières, rue du Chemin Vert, where the installation is perfect in every detail. In constant communication with the best breeders of England, the firm keeps a large stock of dogs of all breeds, receiving new specimens several times a week. It is a custom of the house to deliver dogs only after they have been thoroughly examined by the customer. Thus there is every guarantee of buying an absolutely healthy animal.

M. Koerige has also a special kennel in Belgium, where griffons of that particular breed are brought up. Two rare specimens now in the establishment are the biggest and heaviest dog in the world, as well as one of the smallest. One is Fello, a huge Saint Bernard that weighs nearly a hundred kilos; the other being Coquette, a tiny English toy terrier weighing 900 grammes. Other interesting dogs are Lili, a Pomeranian, two and a half pounds in weight, many Brussels griffons and German shepherds.

Among recent customers have been Mme. Régina Badet, who purchased a beautiful brown Pomeranian loup weighing three pounds; M. Leclerc, Commander Salan, of the steamship Ceylan, a black Angora cat with orange colored eyes; Baronne de Gunsbourg, a French bulldog; Mme. Tea Vitzu, a pair of German shepherds which were sent to Roumania for breeding purposes; M. Fontaine, of the Opéra, Fuchs, a German shepherd; Comte de la Chapelle, Marquis de Turenne, a fox terrier; Comtesse de Monceau, an English toy terrier.

M. Koerige has now in his shop a wonderful little monkey, Tamarin, of the lion monkey kind, which is extremely rare in Europe, and also many capucins, outitis and magnis mocoos.

Cod Liver Oil in the Therapeutics of Children.

[From the European Edition of the Herald]

EVERY year when wintry weather comes the administering of cod liver oil assumes a prominent place in the therapeutics of children. For weak, pale and easily fatigued children and those lacking appetite it is, in fact, the winter medicine, in almost universal use, one of the most popular in any case, and justly so, despite the repugnance with which it is regarded owing to its disagreeable taste.

There are three varieties of cod liver oil—the brown oil, obtained by pressure after prolonged heating; the light or amber colored oil, which is obtained from the fresh liver treated by a cold process, and the white oil, chemically bleached, which contains but a minimum percentage of active principles. Accordingly, the light colored oil is used in preference, the too pronounced taste of the brown oil not permitting its adoption.

It should be considered both as a food and a medication. Cod liver oil owes its nutritive properties in a high degree to the fats it holds in solution in addition to substances which are well known and in current use, such as iodine and phosphorus, certain alkaloids, such as butylamine, amylamine, hexylamine, gadolin and morrhine.

The use of cod liver oil is not restricted to invalids. It is also given to children who are quite well but whose growth is deficient or retarded, or again it is often given to children who are too thin or overtaxed by a too rapid and excessive growth. It is also prescribed for cases of tuberculosis, wherever it may be localized, for pulmonary tuberculosis particularly in the forms without fever, in surgical tuberculosis, in osseous forms—for instance, Pott's disease—in coxalgia, in white swellings, in cold abscesses and fistulas. It is very useful, too, in the convalescence stage of whooping cough and measles; briefly, it is valuable as a prophylactic in all affections which predispose to tuberculosis.

The dose generally administered is much less than that which should be prescribed to obtain the maximum effect. In the case of adults the quantity taken should be at least fifty grammes a day, a few minutes before meals. The quantity for a child of from two to three years old is from ten to twenty grammes a day; from three to six years, twenty to thirty grammes; from six to twelve years, thirty to forty grammes a day.

Attempts have long been made to conceal by certain artifices of preparation the bad taste of cod liver oil, to which many people, and more particularly children, can never become habituated. Sometimes essence of eucalyptus is added as a corrective, three drops in one hundred grammes. Sometimes it is prescribed in capsules, but then one is obliged to administer a large number, so that this pharmaceutical form is hardly practicable. It is found a good plan to take a large bite at a slice of orange immediately after having swallowed the oil.

In cold weather cod liver oil is generally more readily tolerated than in hot, hence its use should not be advised in summer.

Poisoning Due to Shoes Colored With Aniline Dyes.

[From the European Edition of the Herald]

DR. RIVIERE reports a case of poisoning occurring in the case of a boy of fourteen years, who, putting on his shoes about one o'clock in the afternoon, was seized about two hours afterward with painful symptoms and a blackish coloration of the mucous membrane and skin, and later fell into a faint which lasted for some time. When Dr. Riviere saw the boy he found that his tongue was black and swollen, while the heart was beating at the rate of only fifty-five to fifty-six times a minute.

The boy's water was submitted to Dr. Deniges for analysis and he detected the presence of reduction products of haemoglobin, such as are found in cases of poisoning by aromatic amines, of which aniline is the type. The boy's shoes had been colored with a substance containing aniline. The condition of the patient subsequently improved rapidly.
